  - As part of the MetroCommon 2050 regional plan update, MAPC’s Research team and staff are conducting several research projects that we hope shine a light on regional issues and provide rigorous evidence to inform equitable policy recommendations. These projects include, but are not limited to, white papers framing definitions of residential and commercial displacement and a proposed approach to measuring residential displacement vulnerability and impacts; a research brief, in collaboration with Cornell professor Dr. Linda Shi, analyzing the potential fiscal impact on municipalities from property damage due to future climate change-induced coastal flooding, and possible interventions; and an investigation into speculative investment trends in Greater Boston’s housing market. In this discussion we will engage in dialogue on this research and learn about the larger MetroCommon 2050 initiative
